

FIRE MARSHAL COURSE

INTRODUCTION

To ensure orderly evacuation of everyone in your building in the event of a fire incident, it is essential that you have a designated fire marshal or fire marshals who are fully aware of their responsibilities. This is true regardless of the environment you are in, be it a small office space or a large warehouse facility.

Training for fire marshals is essential for providing them with life-saving knowledge that they can use in the workplace, at home, or anywhere a fire breakout occurs. Learners comprehend the causes, effects, and impacts of fire and how to avoid their spread. They also implement appropriate emergency procedures and understand the many types of fire extinguishers and how to use them.

The Occupational Health & Safety Act of 2007's Legal Notice 59 on Fire Reduction regulations, which call for every workplace to have trained response teams and firefighting equipment, can be complied with in part by training fire marshals. These regulations also require that all response teams be updated on their training on a regular basis.
